Expanded center dedicated

Quarter million visitors expected at NSTL in 1984

By ELLIS CUEVAS

Official dedication ceremonies were held Friday for NASA's National Space Technology Laboratories' 4,500 square foot addition to its Visitors Center.

Congressman Trent Lott, Astronaut Terry J. Hart, NASA Public Affairs Director Frank S. Johnson Jr. and NSTL Director Jerry Hias were among the dedication speakers.

During 1983 some 92,000 persons were hosted by the NSTL Visitors Center, according to Hias, who said there were some 40,000 visitors in 1980.

Hias praised completion of the Visitors Center addition for which a ground-breaking was held in October 1983.

Items for the newly enlarged center—incorporating a theme of Space-Oceans-Earth—came from Kennedy Space Flight Center, Johnson Space Center and Marshall Flight Center.

NASA's work in aquatic plant research, earth resources, engine testing and the space shuttle program will be explained to visitors in the new Hall of Achievements.

An exhibit on the history of rocketry is also included which will show early documentation of rocket testing.

Many of the programs of on-site governmental agencies will also be explained through exhibits. These include the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) Data Buoy Center, the Mississippi Army Ammunition Plant, the Naval Oceanographic Center, the U.S. Geological Survey's Gulf Coast Hydroscience Center and the Environmental Chemistry Laboratory of the Environmental Protection Agency.

Lott said, "There is a great need for this facility, as Mississippi has three astronauts, and a fourth who now has made his home on the Coast."

"We have been keeping this place quiet (NSTL). It is a real jewel we have, as there are 19 agencies here," Lott added.

In closing his brief talk Lott stated, "This $760,000 addition is the showcase of the history of NASA."

After the opening remarks, an air-traffic controller, who was with the arm which collected the disabled shuttle, said that was his first public appearance since then.

The astronaut was described by Mack Herring, NSTL public affairs officer, as "no stranger here, and as America's Number One Mechanic for ACE Satellite Repair Service."

Hart stated, "In 1979 when I first visited NSTL, things were not going too well with the space program. The engines were falling apart, the tiles were coming off, and it was through the dedication of so many people that this all changed."

"The quality of work and dedication of people at NSTL has really impressed me, as they are the group that gets us started into space," the astronaut reported.

Hart's popularity was shown by a steady line of persons seeking his autograph after the dedication ceremony.

Kenny tribute set for 2 p.m. at St. Mary's Cemetery

Ceremonies Sunday to mark Peace Officers Memorial Day

Special ceremonies are scheduled for Sunday afternoon, May 13, throughout the state at burial sites of 18 Mississippi Highway Patrol troopers killed in the line of duty since the agency was created in 1938.

Col. George Saxon, patrol chief, said the tribute is in observance of Peace Officers Memorial Day and coincides with Gov. Bill Allain proclaiming the week of May 12-19 as "Law Enforcement Week in Mississippi."

Saxon said uniformed troopers and family members will gather at the gravesites to solemnly read names and loved ones.

Gov. Allain said the observance is a tribute to the brave men and women who serve the state.

state, municipalities and counties are made safe by their presence. Their extensive training in law enforcement make them respected professionals in their specialized careers.

According to the proclamation, Law Enforcement Week was declared "To salute those valiant, dedicated, and loyal public servants in the State of Mississippi who are law enforcement officers, and to remember those officers who have died in the line of duty."

Peace Officers Memorial Day was of national proportion since 1955, created by the U.S. Congress.

The day is observed annually on May 15.

Wastewater irrigation plan okayed for federal funding

By NAN PATTON EHRBRIGHT

Waveland Regional Wastewater District's innovative sewage treatment system proposal has received tentative approval for federal funding provided local officials stop the discharge of raw sewage waste into the Jourdan River.

Harry Royals, chief of the water division of the Mississippi Bureau of Pollution Control, said Friday the Mississippi Commission on Natural Resources has agreed to provide $500,000 in federal funds to begin work on the system.

State demands county involvement

approval for federal funding provided local officials stop the discharge of raw sewage waste into the Jourdan River.

Harry Royals, chief of the water division of the Mississippi Bureau of Pollution Control, said Friday the Mississippi Commission on Natural Resources has agreed to provide $500,000 in federal funds to begin work on the system.

But the commission placed a condition that, in addition to cleaning up sewage coming from areas of Waveland and Bay St. Louis, pollution be cleaned up from malfunctioning septic tanks and homes without any sewage disposal located along the Jourdan River itself.

The commission's vote means the Waveland Wastewater District will be placed on the priority list for U.S. Environmental Protection Agency funding for the remainder of fiscal 1984.

Royals said the $500,000 was recovered from projects in which grant amounts were underspent.

The funds would pay for engineering work and the first phase of construction ding over a four-year period because it is classified as an "innovative" treatment alternative.

The irrigation method was selected as a preferred alternative after local residents opposed extending city outfall lines to the Jourdan River and upgrading the Waveland treatment plant.

But wastewater authorities, concerned about costs, have insisted on a commitment for 85 percent federal funding before moving forward with plans for a spray irrigation system.

Last month wastewater authorities met in Jackson with officials from the state Natural Resources Commission and Bureau of Pollution Control.

At that time wastewater administrator Ethel Schott reported state officials supported the plan and would fund it if money became available.

UPRIVER CLEANUP

"If we're going to spend extra money by going to spray land irrigation treatment," Royals said, "then we're going to have to clean up the whole Jourdan River."

According to Royals, federal funds will not be granted unless the county and city agree to a schedule by which they're going to address this issue and how, in the future, new septic tanks and individual homes will be provided for.

"I'm not saying they have to go out and do the work—I'm saying they have to make some commitment to us and come up with a time schedule to solve the problem."

According to state and local officials, waste is currently being discharged into the Jourdan through inadequate septic tanks and simple drain pipes from about 600 homes.

John Longo, Waveland mayor and chairman of the wastewater district, said Friday that "The water below discharge from the treatment plant is cleaner than water above our discharge, which means the river is being polluted not from discharges from the plant but from septic tanks.

"If we're going to get out here and spend a ton of money and the federal government is going to give us a large grant, we have to institute some rules and regulations."

"More and more," he said, "the wastewater district is going to spread out into development of a county sewage system."

"It's going to be a long-range program."

"It's going to take a while to police it, and we have to institute some sort of enforcement program."

Longo said he did not know if the wastewater district had the authority to enact a sewer code.

If not, he said, it would have to come through the board of supervisors.

Codes are the most beautiful protective thing that ever happened to civilized people," he said.

Present plans call for a 20-inch discharge pipe to the irrigation site.

If increased by four inches, Longo said, the pipe would accommodate residents in the southern part of Hancock County for probably the next 30 to 50 years.

But county residents would have to help pay for the project, he said, noting that the burden of paying for wastewater treatment now falls on the municipal residents of Waveland and Bay St. Louis.

"The next move," Longo said, "is a cooperative move between the wastewater district and the three entities—Hancock County, City of Waveland and City of Bay St. Louis—to work together to solve the pollution problems."

"There could be a nominal cost involved, but not enough to offset the benefits."

The priority list, Royals said, will be reviewed at a July 11 public hearing, at which time the selection of projects for the 1985 priority list also will take place.

The money, he said, will be available as soon as the Department of Natural Resources approves the priority list after the public hearing—probably at an August meeting.

AND THE BICENTENNIAL

By Michael P. Zuckert

(Michael P. Zuckert is the Congdon Professor of Political Science and Chairman of the Political Science Department at Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota.)

Theme: We can best celebrate the achievements of the American Founders by understanding their political innovations.

Editor's Note: During the Revolution, Americans had begun to look for forms of government that would secure the rights expressed in the Declaration of Independence.

Some arrangements worked better than others.

One arrangement which worked badly was the national government created by the Articles of Confederation.

It proved unable to keep its treaty commitments to foreign governments, and could not collect the revenues needed to finance its enormous debt.

But the 1780s were a time of experimentation in the State governments (many wrote new Constitutions), and by mid-decade many were ready to try a similar experiment at the national level.

Professor Zuckert examines the political innovation that resulted from the Framers' experimentation.

1984 not only brings us into the year of George Orwell's famous book, but brings us close to the celebration of an event of even greater importance, the bicentennial of the Constitution.

This bicentennial, like 1976's celebration of the Declaration of Independence, is likely to be marked by great public hoopla. This is as it should be, for we have always treasured the Constitution as the source of what we and others consider our impressive political heritage.

But if marching bands and athletic contests, pageants and parades remain the whole of our celebration, we will surely fail to understand the occasion and thus fall short of what it invites.

One can celebrate the beginning of a war, and of a people, with an emotional outpouring.

One cannot celebrate in that way the more sober, more thoughtful, more creative beginning of a new political order which secured the achievements of that war and provided the framework in which that people could thrive.

We can celebrate these founding events best by understanding them.

The achievements of the American Founders can be understood in terms of three great political innovations. The Founders brought forth the first political regime dedicated to securing human rights. They also invented a wholly new kind of federalism, and they constructed a new kind of republican government.

The Founders announced their dedication to the protection of rights in the Declaration of Independence, and in the next decade or so they searched for the political forms which would best achieve that goal.

They never wavered from it, and they showed themselves to be remarkably open to learning from experience. The experience of the 1780s was by no means entirely positive, and men like Thomas Jefferson and James Madison concluded that important changes in political forms were required to achieve the security of rights they sought.

The new federalism and the new republicanism were embraced as means for the achievement of the ends announced in the Declaration.

In the new federalism, the Founders sought a novel way to combine the States into a union with power over a limited number of objects—for example commerce and foreign affairs.

Every federal system in the past had failed. Some had failed through weakness in the central body, which meant it lacked the resources to resist strong neighbors or to manage successfully the relations among the smaller units.

This was the failing of the Articles of Confederation, the form of union which preceded the new Constitution in America.

Others had failed because of excessive strength, where the power of the central authority was so great that the smaller governments ultimately lost their political liberty.

The Americans found a structure that provided the combination of central strength and local autonomy which was much closer to being just right than any in history.

The Founders were committed to republicanism, or what we would call democracy, because they saw it as the form of government most likely to secure the rights of citizens and to preserve liberty in society.

Yet they recognized that the forms of republicanism they had adopted following independence had no completely succeeded in securing rights and providing for public tranquility.

State governments had proved dangerously unstable in some cases, and in others had used their powers arbitrarily.

Therefore the Framers struck out in daring new directions in the attempt to find a republican structure which would more surely achieve the blessings of liberty.

The founding generation pursued these blessings diligently, and courageously found the means to secure them. This was and is their most important legacy.

1984 is a particularly fitting time to start thinking about the Founders' achievements: there is a very real connection to Orwell's book.

Orwell portrays a world in which liberty had died, and with it almost everything else that makes life worthwhile except, perhaps, the indomitable desire for liberty itself.

He saw that even the most private things, like the love between men and women, the bond between parents and children, the satisfactions of a career, are endangered by the loss of public liberty.

While no set of political institutions alone can make a people free, the American constitutional order has done all that can be done.

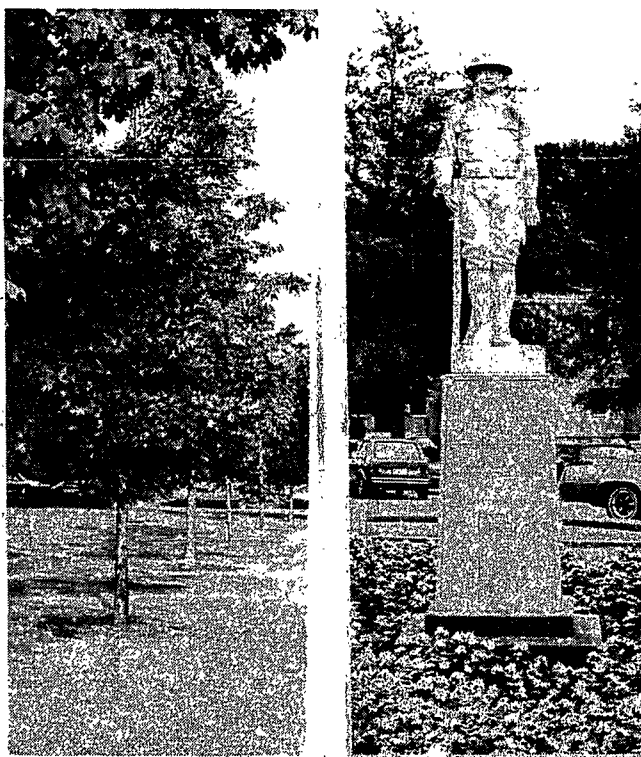

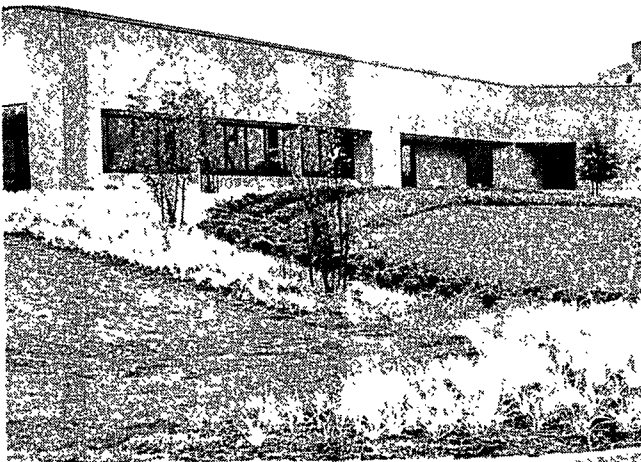

An intelligent celebration of the Constitution's bicentennial can help renew our understanding of the principles and institutions of liberty that, for all the imperfections of our national life, have worked to make our 1984 no replica of Orwell's.

WHAT'S AT STAKE IN EL SALVADOR

The Central American nation of El Salvador is in the news as it struggles to hold free elections amid continued fighting between government troops and leftist guerrillas.

The situation has been given a great deal of attention in the U.S. and perhaps that's only appropriate because what happens in El Salvador should be of interest to all of us.

I had the opportunity to attend a White House briefing the other day on Central America. It helped answer some of the questions I had about the U.S. role in El Salvador and what is at stake there.

In a nutshell, what we're trying to do is provide enough military aid to prevent a takeover by communist forces.

The fact that democratic elections are underway in El Salvador is significant.

The elections might not have run as smoothly as ours do but, putting it in perspective, you have to realize they don't have as much experience as we do with elections.

While political opponents in the U.S. use the ballot box against each other, the different groups in such countries as El Salvador all too frequently use guns as a means of intimidation.

Even so, the interest of people who democracy in a key Central American nation, then it should take the necessary steps to do so.

And, you have to remember that the capital of El Salvador, San Salvador, is only 1,180 statute miles from Biloxi, Ms.

primarily by a handful, estimated at only a few thousand people in a country of 4.7 million people, of insurgents.

The U.S. interest in El Salvador is to promote the growth of democratic institutions, assist in improving living conditions and enhance economic development.

In order to prevent the U.S. from doing that, the communist-backed guerrillas are creating an atmosphere of fear.

Over the last few years, important strides have been made by the government of El Salvador toward meaningful reforms.

For example, in 1983, prisoners and guerrillas benefited from amnesty granted 1,000 of their number and a constituent assembly signed a constitution.

The document would strengthen individual guarantees and encourage an increase of judicial independence.

In addition, land reforms were extended and civilian deaths attributed to political violence have diminished.

The adult literacy rate in El Salvador had grown from 49 percent to 82 percent by 1980, indicating substantial improvement in the educational standards of the country. Along with that improvement has come renewed interest in their future.

If the U.S. can act to encourage democracy in a key Central American nation, then it should take the necessary steps to do so.

And, you have to remember that the capital of El Salvador, San Salvador, is only 1,180 statute miles from Biloxi, Ms.

Attorney General Report

A new law sponsored by the Attorney General's Office and passed by the Legislature should help speed up the process of carrying out sentences given by Mississippi juries.

Before convicted murderer Jimmy Lee Gray was finally executed last September, 40 different state and federal judges had heard or reviewed his case in 82 different actions.

It took the state seven years to fight through the various delaying tactics filed on behalf of Gray and to bring him to the gas chamber.

Gray was the first - and so far the last - convicted murderer executed in Mississippi since the death penalty was reinstated in 1974.

Some prisoners now on death row have been successful in delaying their scheduled executions for almost 10 years.

The Post-Conviction Relief Act limits both the number of appeals and the time in which a convict may file motions with the courts.

"Enactment of this law should save the Attorney General's Office thousands of hours of legal research and court appearances, and save the taxpayers of the state thousands of dollars, in addition to the satisfaction the public will get from seeing criminals justly and more quickly punished for their acts," Attorney General Ed Pittman said.

This law, which has been signed by the governor and is now in effect, applies not only to death penalty cases, but to all criminal cases.

A three-year statute of limitations is set by the new law on post-conviction appeals to the state courts.

The three-year period begins after the state Supreme Court has heard and ruled upon the first appeal of a case.

If there was no appeal, the three years is measured from the last day an appeal could have been filed, 30 days after sentencing.

Exceptions will be made for cases where new evidence is found after the three-year period or where decisions made in other cases would change the outcome of a case which is more than three years old.

The law was designed to provide prisoners, the bench and the bar with a simple, uniform procedure for appeals, Assistant Attorney General Bill Boyd said.

Boyd and Wayne Snuggs, who heads the criminal division of the Attorney General's Office, helped to draft the bill, which was introduced by Sen. Martin Smith of Poplarville.

Other legislators instrumental in the passage of the bill were Sen. Howard Dyer of Greenville, Rep. J. B. Van Slyke of Hattiesburg, and Rep. Terrell Stubbs of Mendenhall.

The new law incorporates the best features of existing state and federal procedures for post conviction relief, Snuggs said. "Hopefully, it will cut out the hodge-podge of remedies now floating around."

Three charged with burglaries

By NAN PATTON EHRBRIGHT

Three persons have been arrested in connection with a series of recent burglaries in Clermont Harbor, Hancock County Sheriff's Department Investigator Delbert Seay said yesterday.

Seay said one adult and two juveniles were arrested Thursday and Friday for burglaries of summer homes and dwellings that have occurred during the past few weeks.

William J. Skinner, who gave his address as General Delivery, Clermont Harbor, was released under $5,000 bond after booking, Seay said.

The two juveniles have been turned over to the Youth Court.

According to Seay, one of the juveniles was also charged for vandalism of an automobile.

Also this week, a juvenile was taken into custody and turned over to the Youth Court for burglary of a home in Pearlinton about two weeks ago.

That arrest, Seay said, was made on Wednesday.

Seminar for investors

Options for the Small Investor, a free seminar open to the general public, will be conducted Wednesday, May 23, at the City-County Library in Bay St. Louis.

The two-hour program, sponsored by the Hancock County Extension Service and the Extension Service Money Management Center in Biloxi, will begin at 9:30 a.m.

"If your savings and investment holdings total less than $10,000, you may have found that a greater number of savings and investment options are available to you than in past years," Area Consumer Management Specialist Jan Kelly notes.

"Certificates of Deposit in small denominations, mutual funds, money market accounts and higher yielding government bonds can give amounts as small as $25 greater earning power than ever before."

"But if your savings method has always consisted of the company retirement plan and your passbook savings, you may lack knowledge of saving and investment strategy," she adds.

Topics to be covered in the Bay St. Louis seminar include: basic investment objectives, types of savings and investment instruments, and how to read the stock market page in the newspaper.

Literature to be provided by the Extension Service includes: basic investment definitions, information on Individual Retirement Accounts and comparisons of various savings and investment instruments on the basis of liquidity, return, risk and tax benefits.

Friendship Oak DAR installs officers

By Joe Pilet, recording secretary
Friendship Oak Chapter NS DAR

During an action packed meeting of the Friendship Oak Chapter National Society Daughters of the American Revolution which was held on Monday at the Long Beach Ramada Inn Mrs. John C. Elkins, organizing regent, received an appreciation plaque. Mrs. Philip R. Davenport, newly elected regent, made the presentation in behalf of the membership.

Edgar Perez, news editor of The Sea Coast Echo, was presented with a plaque of appreciation for his outstanding support in making the presentation of the new regent. Mrs. Elkins expressed her appreciation for the excellent coverage promoting DAR projects.

Two new members, Mrs. Andrew Clifton Hutto Jr. of Gulfport and Mrs. Theresa Wheeler of Bay St. Louis were recognized.

In an impressive ceremony Mrs. Alfred M. Steadley, chaplain, installed officers who will serve during 1984-85 and include: Mrs. Philip R. Davenport, regent; James R. Thomas, vice regent; Nunez C. Pilet, secretary; William J. Gemmel, treasurer; E. George Cassie, registrar; Catherine C. Shedd, corresponding secretary; Larry B. Lisenbee, chaplain; Robert C. Williams, historian; and James E. Young, librarian.

In presenting the gavel of authority to the incoming regent Mrs. Elkins said: "This gavel is made of highly polished crepe myrtle wood. It was made in the workshop of a DAR supported school, Tamassee of South Carolina, and presented by Mrs. William S. Murphy, vice president general from Mississippi. It was Mrs. Murphy's request that the historic gavel be passed on for use by each newly elected regent as a part of the ritual."

At the luncheon which was served prior to the business meeting, small American flags were used as place markers, and low bowls of American Beauty red roses were placed at vantage points. Centering the Board of Director's table was an attractive basket of fabric and lace flowers. Mrs. Thomas, hostess for the occasion, was highly complimented on both menu selections and decorations.

The program included the President General's message given by Mrs. Pilet, a national defense commentary by Mrs. Mark Payne and a briefing on activities of the 93rd Continental Congress held in Washington during April and attended by Mrs. Elkins as a delegate from Friendship Oak Chapter.

Mrs. Elkins stressed the importance of adhering to the principles of the Great Seal Constitution: safe-guarding liberty and freedom and appreciation for the sacrifices made by the 12 resolutions presented at the Congress and suggested that members of the DAR express themselves individually to their congressmen on topics in which they are especially interested. "My field is education," she said, "and I would like to see our public schools turn out better equipped students."

Of the current controversy concerning black membership in the DAR Mrs. Elkins read from a resolution:

"The National Society Daughters of the American Revolution has always recognized with pride the leadership, sacrifices and heroism of all the American forces including more than 5,000 black soldiers of the Revolutionary War, and particularly the vital role played by the Rhode Island Regiment, which was composed of black patriots who served bravely throughout the American Revolution."

"Nowhere on our application for membership is there any mention of race or color," Mrs. Elkins said.

A "Hi and Bye" party is planned for May 19 in the home of Mrs. Pilet in Bay St. Louis where members will welcome the newly elected regent and say goodbye to Mrs. Elkins who will move with her family to Georgia during the summer.

ETV Brief

DIXIE GARDENS

No longer will Mississippi viewers of "The Victory Garden" on ETV have to translate tips from the New England garden to their own Southern land or enjoy vicariously the crops that do well up North but wouldn't survive a day in Dixie.

Now, Southerners have their own segment on "The Victory Garden"—"The Southern Victory Garden"—which can be seen on the popular program at 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays on Mississippi ETV.

Based at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga., this regular feature of the how-to series about gardening and growing will be hosted by James Wilson, a longtime horticultural writer and gardener.

"The Southern Victory Garden" represents the first attempt in the series' effort to create a national gardening program, one that would ultimately consist of many regional gardens.

Women in business confab scheduled in Jackson

Women interested in learning about varied careers and women in business will meet in Jackson for the Third Annual Women and Business Conference to be held at the Sheraton Regency Convention Center on May 24 and 25. The conference is sponsored by the Mississippi Research and Development Center; Mississippi Small Business Development Center; and the Small Business Administration.

Susan M. Garber, state director of the Pennsylvania Small Business Development Center at the Wharton Entrepreneurial Center at the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia, Pa., and The Reverend Canon Molly McBride, priest at St. Andrews Episcopal Cathedral in Jackson, will be the featured speakers for the two-day conference.

Ms. Garber was appointed as the first state director of the Pennsylvania Small Business Development Centers (SBDC) program in 1979. Since the program's inception, it has grown to include 13 university-based small business development centers throughout the state. Ms. Garber has recently been appointed to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives Subcommittee on Small Business and is currently president of the National Association of Small Development Centers. Ms. Garber will speak on "Taking Charge in the Eighties."

The Rev. Canon McBride will discuss "Something Special: Women in Uncommon Professions" at the conference. A native of Watertown, New York, she earned a master of divinity at Harvard's Episcopal Divinity School in Cambridge. She is the first woman to become an Episcopal priest in Mississippi.

Other speakers featured in the conference workshops are Beverly Hogan, executive director, Governor's Office of Federal-State Programs; Jo Hollman, sociology professor at Hinds Junior College; Dr. James R. Baugh, clinical psychologist; S. Myers Fletcher, staff specialist of corporate marketing at Bell South Services; Nancy King, owner of Nancy's Candy; Betty Kennedy, director of executive resources of International Business Machines; Charlotte Tullos, director of Career Development Center and Adult Services at University of Southern Mississippi; and Norma Fields, capitol correspondent with the Daily Journal in Tupelo.

Topics for the workshops include "Two-Career Families," "Negotiating," "Self-Esteem," "Breaking Into Sales," "Entrepreneurship," "Women in Management," "Changing Careers" and "Women in Politics." Conference registration will be held on Thursday, May 24, from 1-2 p.m. Cost of the conference is $45 if paid before May 24, and $55 on May 24. The fee includes all conference activities and workshops; hors d'oeuvres on May 24; and continental breakfast and lunch on May 25. Sessions begin at 2 p.m. on Thursday, May 24, and Friday's meeting begins at 8:30 a.m. with a continental breakfast.

More information on the conference and registration is available from Joyce Lewis, conference coordinator, Mississippi Research and Development Center, 3825 Ridgewood Road, Jackson, MS 39216 or telephone 601-982-6231.

In the case of wildfires, crime prevention and fire prevention go together. In Mississippi, believe it or not, most forest fires are caused by arson, and woods arson is a felony.

Youth groups associated with local sheriff's offices, are taking on fire prevention programs in some states, like neighboring Louisiana. Maybe we need that in some counties in our state too.

Similarly, local "Neighborhood Watch" programs could be valuable in reporting suspicious activity, including woods arson, when

Workshop set to help disoriented aging

The University of Southern Mississippi School of Nursing in conjunction with the Biloxi Veterans Administration Medical Center will present a workshop, entitled "Validation Fantasy Therapy on Friday, May 25, from 7:30 a.m. to 3:45 p.m. in the Veterans Administration Medical Center auditorium in Gulfport.

Because disoriented persons often use fantasy as a way of coping with a painful reality, the workshop emphasizes accepting aged persons where they are—including their fantasies—to help them resolve the unfinished business of the past and restore dignity to the present.

This workshop is a basic introduction to the concept and techniques of validation fantasy therapy for health care workers.

Participants will have an opportunity to observe application of the therapy with aged persons. Naomi Fell, guest speaker for the workshop, is nationally known for her work with the elderly and for insights she has provided into the aging process through workshops, films and publications. Mrs. Fell originated validation fantasy therapy after three years of frustration in using traditional methods with the disoriented elderly.

She received an award from the Council on International Non-theatrical Events for film scripts she wrote on aging. She has also written and acted in many of her husband's award-winning documentary films.

The workshop is for health care workers who work with disoriented aged persons. There is no registration fee. For more information call Nursing Continuing Education at 236-5461.
